Federal Communications Commission -- Tribal Telecommunications Priorities, Developments and Opportunities

Geoffrey Blackwell, Office of Native Affairs and Policy
Cynthia Bryant, Enforcement Bureau
Irene Flannery, Wireline Competition Bureau
Dan Rumelt, Consumer & Governmental Affairs Bureau
Matthew Urick, Media Bureau

The entire world is going digital and Native Communities cannot be left out. Tribal economies, education, healthcare, law enforcement, emergency services will all be empowered with reliable and affordable communications services. Can your community receive the signals? Participate in the information economy? Do you have locally- and nationally-produced information, news, and media dialogue? Can you effectively surf the World Wide Web with a broadband connection? Come listen and discuss what Tribes can do to improve their situations and set their own communications goals and priorities.

Presentation and Discussion Topics:

New Tribal consultation and coordination opportunities with the FCC
Post Digital TV transition opportunities for obtaining licenses for translators and new low-power TV stations
Tribal and Native community related efforts under the FCC's National Broadband Plan
New proposed rules for the Universal Service Fund's High Cost, Rural Health Care and Schools and Libraries (E-Rate) programs
Emerging FCC proposals to make wireless licenses on Tribal lands more available to Tribes
Opportunities for obtaining radio broadcast licenses
Consumer programs and issues: Tribal Lifeline, Link-Up and wireless phone "Bill Shock"
Participation in FCC rulemakings, and how to file a formal or informal complaint at the FCC.
